No. 329190

St. Clair Circuit Court

LC No. 15-001798-PH

ON REMAND

Before: RIORDAN, P.J., and FORT HOOD and SERVITTO, JJ.

RIORDAN, P.J.

This case returns to us on remand from our Supreme Court. When we originally heard this case, we dismissed the appeal for mootness. McGuire v Zoran, unpublished per curiam opinion of the Court of Appeals, issued January 19, 2017 (Docket No. 329190). The Court reversed, reasoning that “the mere fact that the instant [personal protection order] PPO expired during the pendency of this appeal does not render this appeal moot,” and remanded the case to us “for consideration on the merits.” TM v MZ, 501 Mich 312, 320; 916 NW2d 473 (2018). Because the amended PPO was issued based on respondent’s constitutionally protected speech and amounted to an unconstitutional prior restraint on his speech, we reverse the trial court.

I. BACKGROUND FACTS & PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Petitioner TM and respondent MZ are neighbors in Cottrellville Township, Michigan. Respondent is a former trustee of Cottrellville Township and petitioner also has had some involvement in local politics, presently as a member of the Township Parks and Recreation Board. She also has participated in successful recalls of respondent and the supervisor of Cottrellville Township.

Petitioner and respondent have an acrimonious past which includes respondent’s mother (with whom he lived) obtaining a PPO against petitioner’s husband after he allegedly assaulted her. The impetuses for this appeal are highly inflammatory and negative comments respondent posted about petitioner and her family online. Respondent had posted negative comments about petitioner on Facebook, and through private messages, as far back as 2014, but when the nature of these postings, in petitioner's words, "escalated[,]" she petitioned the trial court on July 20, 2015 for a PPO. In an attachment to the petition, petitioner identified eight dates on which respondent allegedly made derogatory comments about her and her family by way of posts on his own Facebook page, on public Facebook pages, or in private messages to undisclosed recipients. Specifically, the attachment stated:

Below are some of the instances where [respondent] used the internet or a computer or other electronic medium to post both public and private messages for the purpose of terrorizing, frightening, intimidating, threatening, or harassing me.

July 6, 2015

[Respondent] made several comments on a post in the St. Clair County, Michigan page on Facebook, including but not limited to; calling me a criminal, accusing me of hiding criminals, having illegal trailers on my property, posting pictures of my yard, [stating] that I meet the requirements of "hurting someone" and that I'm a criminal.

July 6, 2015

[Respondent] sent a private Facebook message to multiple people, with regards to the above mentioned comments made on the St. Clair County, Michigan page, saying that I am criminal, I hide criminals, and saying things about the death of my son, which were not only derogatory and disgusting, but were complete lies, and how it was because of my parenting. These comments were in addition to other things.

May 4, 2015

[Respondent] posted on his Facebook page a picture of a car and a letter with a heading of "Attempted abduction in St. Clair Count [sic], Please share this Info!" Respondent then commented on the post that if there were any questions about the vehicle to join the St. Clair County, Michigan Facebook group.

[Respondent] also commented on this post that the driver of the vehicle "was involved in a form of attempted abduction of a child" and further down [respondent] commented "I actually saw a similar vehicle at [TM's address], where it was there only a couple of minutes." This is my address.

[Respondent] also made a comment on the post about the car on the St. Clair County, Michigan Facebook page wherein he stated "a vehicle just like that was at [petitioner's address] today . . . It watched my home, and then pulled into [petitioners's address]- an address notorious for everything from crime to severe ordinance violations that never go away. It was only there for a few minutes."

April 22, 2015

[Respondent] made a comment on a post about a stolen bbq to “Go look at [petitioner’s address]. . . It is a virtual junk yard of items picked up from the garbage of other[s]”.

September 7, 2014

[Respondent] commented on a post in the St. Clair County, Michigan Facebook page about motorcycles stolen out of Auburn Hills, “. . . my neighbor is at [petitioner’s address]. . . I saw them burning parts and burying them illegally in the ground before. I will be on the lookout for you.”

August 10, 2014

[Respondent] wrote a post on the Facebook Cottrellville Township, Michigan page that included stating we had a “junkyard” and “two illegal commercial trailers”.

[Respondent] then made a comment on his post stating “. . . Bob confirmed there is [sic] severe blight and health violations at [petitioner’s address]. . .”

Respondent later puts a comment on his post with a Court Case [identification] number to look me up in the court docket.

Respondent later comments on his post that I was taken to court and at one time had 12 vehicles in my front yard.

June 2, 2014

[Respondent] commented on a post on the St. Clair County, Michigan Facebook page saying that my yard is used as an “illegal junkyard” and posts the link to a video.

July 24, 2014

[Respondent] sent a message to a private citizen making derogatory comments including that “that family is into drugs.”

Further, in a Facebook message to an undisclosed recipient on July 6, 2015, respondent shared his comments and opinions on petitioner’s parenting abilities, specifically accusing petitioner of allowing her children to partake of illegal drugs, and also discussed the alleged circumstances of her son’s death.

On July 28, 2015, the trial court granted petitioner’s petition and entered a PPO against respondent. The PPO prohibited respondent from “stalking as defined under MCL 750.411h and MCL 750.411i,” and prohibited him from “posting a message through the use of any medium of communication, including the Internet or a computer or any electronic medium, pursuant to MCL 750.411s[.]” On August 3, 2015, respondent moved to terminate the PPO, arguing that petitioner merely was annoyed with his comments and that because there were no allegations of actual, threatened, or attempted violence, her proper remedy was a lawsuit for defamation. At the August 20, 2015 hearing on respondent's motion, the trial court placed both parties under oath. Petitioner stated that, other than being his neighbor, she had no relationship with respondent, and she noted that in the online postings respondent said he was using binoculars to see what was going on in her yard, as well as taking pictures of her and her property, which made her fearful "as to why he's doing this[.]" Petitioner stated that she found respondent's conduct harassing and she just wanted him to leave her and her family alone. Noting that respondent's comments were personal attacks against her and her family, petitioner stated that respondent's actions put her "in fear of what [respondent] is going to do next[]" because of the escalation of the nature of the postings. Petitioner noted that respondent owned a firearm, and that she was in fear for her children and her grandchild.

Respondent's counsel argued that respondent's conduct consisted only of speech, "not actions, not threats, not anything." Respondent's counsel reiterated that petitioner's remedy was a defamation claim, not a PPO, and that the court-imposed prohibitions related to stalking were inappropriate. According to respondent's counsel, the PPO was a restraint on respondent's speech that impermissibly infringed on his First Amendment rights. While respondent's counsel characterized petitioner as actively involved in local politics, petitioner testified that she did not file the petition to recall respondent as a township trustee, but that she did participate in circulating the recall petition. After hearing oral argument, the trial court modified the PPO so that respondent only was prohibited from posting messages "pursuant to MCL 750.411(s)." The trial court subsequently entered (1) an order granting in part the motion to modify the PPO, (2) as well as the amended PPO. The amended PPO provides that respondent is prohibited from "posting a message through the use of any medium of communication, including the Internet or a computer or any electronic medium, pursuant to MCL 750.411s," and that the order remained in effect until January 28, 2016. Where there is no indication that the trial court renewed this amended PPO, it expired while the appeal to this Court was pending.

We do not disagree with the petitioner or the trial court that respondent's statements often were inappropriate, at times crude, and even sometimes, with respect to the death of petitioner's son, offensive. Inappropriate, crude, and offensive language, however, is not necessarily excepted from constitutional protection. Thus, we cannot adopt the trial court's preference to treat a PPO, which in this case is a prior restraint on respondent's speech, as a means "to help supplement the rules that we all live in society by." The First Amendment to the United States Constitution demands that we not treat such speech-based injunctions so lightly.

II. CONSTITUTIONALLY PROTECTED SPEECH

Respondent argues that the trial court abused its discretion by issuing the PPO based solely on speech that was entitled to constitutional protection. We agree.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW

"We review for an abuse of discretion a trial court's determination whether to issue a PPO because it is an injunctive order." Hayford v Hayford, 279 Mich App 324, 325; 760 NW2d 503 (2008). "'[A]n abuse of discretion occurs only when the trial court's decision is outside the range of reasonable and principled outcomes.'" Sanders v McLaren-Macomb, 323 Mich App

254, 264; 916 NW2d 305 (2018), quoting Saffian v Simmons, 477 Mich 8, 12; 727 NW2d 132 (2007) (alteration in Sanders). “A trial court . . . necessarily abuses its discretion when it makes an error of law.” Kostadinovski v Harrington, 321 Mich App 736, 743; 909 NW2d 907 (2017) (quotation marks omitted). Constitutional issues, as questions of law, are reviewed de novo. Winkler v Marist Fathers of Detroit, Inc, 500 Mich 327, 333; 901 NW2d 566 (2017). Similarly, questions of statutory interpretation also are reviewed de novo. Millar v Constr Code Auth, 501 Mich 233, 237; 912 NW2d 521 (2018).

B. APPLICABLE LAW

In this case, petitioner sought a PPO pursuant to MCL 600.2950a, which allows for “an independent action to obtain . . . a [PPO] to restrain or enjoin an individual from engaging in conduct that is prohibited under . . . MCL 750.411h, 750.441i, and 750.411s.” MCL 600.2950a(1). In order to warrant a PPO pursuant to MCL 600.2950a, the petition must “allege[] facts that constitute stalking as defined in section 411h or 411i, or conduct that is prohibited under section 411s, of the Michigan penal code” MCL 600.2950a(1). “[T]he petitioner [has] the burden of persuasion in a hearing held on a motion to terminate or modify an ex parte PPO.” Pickering v Pickering, 253 Mich App 694, 699; 659 NW2d 649 (2002). Thus, petitioner had to present sufficient evidence of conduct prohibited by MCL 750.411s to “justify continuation of the PPO.” Pickering, 253 Mich App at 699 (quotation marks omitted); MCL 600.2950a(1).

Conduct prohibited by MCL 750.411s includes posting “a message through the use of any medium of communication . . . without the victim’s consent, if . . . [t]he person knows or has reason to know that posting the message could cause 2 or more separate noncontinuous acts of unconsented contact with the victim,” and, by posting the message, the person “intended to cause conduct that would make the victim feel terrorized, frightened, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or molested.” MCL 750.411s(1)(a)-(b). The statute also requires proof that conduct arising from posting the message would cause a reasonable person, and did cause the victim, to “suffer emotional distress and to feel terrorized, frightened, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or molested.” MCL 750.411s(1)(c)-(d). However, MCL 750.411s “does not prohibit constitutionally protected speech or activity.” MCL 750.411s(6). Therefore, in order to warrant a PPO pursuant to MCL 600.2950a(1), the trial court had to find that respondent’s postings—his speech—were not constitutionally protected. MCL 750.411s(6).

The First Amendment, applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment, provides that “Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech.” Virginia v Black, 538 US 343, 358; 123 S Ct 1536; 155 L Ed 2d 535 (2003), quoting US Const, Am I. “The United States Supreme Court has held that the federal constitution protects speech over the Internet to the same extent as speech over other media.” Thomas M Cooley Law Sch, 300 Mich App 245, 256; 833 NW2d 331 (2013), citing Reno v American Civil Liberties Union, 521 US 844, 870; 117 S Ct 2329; 138 L Ed 2d 874 (1997). However, the “right to speak freely is not absolute.” Cooley, 300 Mich App at 256, citing Chaplinsky v New Hampshire, 315 US 568, 571; 62 S Ct 766; 86 L Ed 1031 (1942). For example, “[I]belous utterances [are] not . . . within the area of constitutionally protected speech” and so a state may enact laws punishing them. Beauharnais v Illinois, 343 US 250, 266; 72 S Ct 725; 96 L Ed 919 (1952).

Prohibitions relating to content, however, are few, due to the First Amendment's "bedrock principle" that an idea cannot be prohibited "simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable." Texas v Johnson, 491 US 397, 414; 109 S Ct 2533; 105 L Ed 2d 342 (1989). "The government may not regulate [speech] based on hostility—or favoritism—towards the underlying message expressed." R A V v City of Saint Paul, Minn, 505 US 377, 386; 112 S Ct 2538; 120 L Ed 2d 305 (1992). "The First Amendment permits restrictions upon the content of speech in a few limited areas, which are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality." Virginia v Black, 538 US 343, 358–359; 123 S Ct 1536; 155 L Ed 2d 535 (2003) (quotation marks omitted). Thus, the First Amendment does not protect obscenity or defamation, within certain limits. R A V, 505 US at 383. "A State may punish those words which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace," including "fighting words," "inciting or producing imminent lawless action," and "true threat[s]." Black, 538 US at 359 (quotation marks omitted).

C. ANALYSIS

The trial court abused its discretion by refusing to terminate the PPO. Respondent's Facebook posts and messages, quite clearly, were not "fighting words," did not "incit[e] or produc[e] imminent lawless action," and were not "true threat[s]." Id. Fighting words include "those personally abusive epithets which, when addressed to the ordinary citizen, are, as a matter of common knowledge, inherently likely to provoke violent reaction . . ." Id., quoting Cohen v California, 403 US 15, 20; 91 S Ct 1780; 29 L Ed 2d 284 (1971). There is nothing in the record to support, when respondent made any of the foregoing statements, he did so in a situation where it was "inherently likely to provoke violent reaction," considering he made the statements on the internet, in a public forum, far removed from any potential violence. See id. A "true threat," meanwhile, "encompass[es] those statements where the speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence to a particular individual or group of individuals." Black, 538 US at 359. While respondent's posts were undoubtedly in poor taste and offensive, they did not reach the level of intending the commission of an unlawful act of violence. See id.

Further, respondent's statements did not "incit[e] or produc[e] imminent lawless action . . ." Id. The closest that respondent's speech came to that standard was his assertion that someone should "[g]o look at" petitioner's address in search of a stolen grill. That statement was not likely to incite illegal activities, because "looking at" an individual's house, yard, or property, is not illegal. Had respondent urged the individual to break in petitioner's house or to otherwise trespass on her property, there would be a legitimate question regarding whether his speech was protected. As the record stands, there was no such suggestion by respondent. Id.

The trial court noted that respondent's statements regarding petitioner's alleged illegal activities, the most serious of which was involvement in a kidnapping, likely would have produced unconsented contact from the community. Regardless of the veracity of that assertion by the trial court, the United States Supreme Court has determined in similar cases that respondent's speech still was protected. See Org for a Better Austin v Keefe, 402 US, 415, 417-419; 91 S Ct 1575; 29 L Ed 2d 1 (1971) (holding that First Amendment protection applied to the distribution of leaflets even where those leaflets accused an individual of racism, provided personal information about the person including his telephone number, and urged the recipients of the leaflets to contact him); see also NAACP v Claiborne Hardware Co, 458 US 886, 909-910; 102 S Ct 3409; 73 L Ed 2d 1215 (1982) (holding that “[s]peech does not lose its protected character,” even where the speech involved publicly listing the names of individuals that did not participate in a boycott, which undoubtedly was meant to lead to unconsented contact with those individuals, so as to “persuade [them] to join the boycott through social pressure and the ‘threat’ of social ostracism.”). At its very base, the exception to the First Amendment for incitement of imminent lawless action requires that the incitement be for actually illegal actions, not just inconvenient or aggravating ones. See id. “There is no categorical ‘harassment exception’ to the First Amendment’s free speech clause.” Saxe v State College Area Sch Dist, 240 F3d 200, 204 (CA 3, 2001) (opinion by ALITO, J.). Here, the record does not support that respondent’s statements were intended to incite imminent lawless action. Keefe, 402 US at 417-419.

Considering that these exceptions to constitutionally protected speech do not apply in the instant case, the only remaining prohibiting category that might be applicable is that the speech was defamatory. Defamatory speech is not protected by the United States Constitution. See Beauharnais, 343 US at 266. “A defamatory communication is one that tends to harm the reputation of a person so as to lower him in the estimation of the community or deter others from associating or dealing with him.” Lawrence v Burdi, 314 Mich App 203, 214; 886 NW2d 748 (2016) (quotation marks omitted). A defamatory statement, by its very definition, is one that is false. Edwards v Detroit News, Inc, 322 Mich App 1, 12; 910 NW2d 394 (2017). “To be considered defamatory, statements must assert facts that are ‘provable as false.’ ” Ghanam v Does, 303 Mich App 522, 545; 845 NW2d 128 (2014), quoting Milkovich v Lorain Journal Co, 497 US 1, 19; 110 S Ct 2695; 111 L Ed 2d 1 (1990). Generally, “[a]ccusations of criminal activity are considered ‘defamation per se’ under the law and so do not require proof of damage to the plaintiff’s reputation.” Ghanam, 303 Mich App at 545.

As an initial step, a trial court must determine whether respondent’s statements were “provable as false” and thus capable of defamatory meaning, Milkovich, 497 US at 19, because “[w]hether a statement is actually capable of defamatory meaning is a preliminary question of law for the court to decide.” Sarkar v Doe, 318 Mich App 156, 179; 897 NW2d 207 (2016) (quotation marks omitted).¹ However, while determining whether a statement is capable of defamatory meaning is a question of law for courts to decide, whether the statements actually were false and defamatory is not. See id.; see also Masson v New Yorker Magazine, Inc, 501 US 496, 521; 111 S Ct 2419; 115 L Ed 2d 447 (1991) (holding that falsity is a question of fact for a factfinder to determine where differing evidence is presented).

Here, the trial court never made a determination whether the accusations made by respondent were false. When respondent stated that he could offer proof that his statements were true, the trial court refused to consider the evidence or to hold an evidentiary hearing. The trial court reasoned that an inquiry regarding falsity was unnecessary because, in the court's own words, "I don't believe because of [petitioner's] status that truth is an absolute defense to this, and so I'm going to deny your request for an evidentiary hearing because I don't think there's any need to do that." The trial court also stated, when discussing respondent's accusation that petitioner had assisted in a kidnapping, "whether or not that actually happened, I don't think that's the standard."

The trial court was incorrect. "Truth is an absolute defense to a defamation claim." Wilson v Sparrow Health Sys, 290 Mich App 149, 155; 799 NW2d 224 (2010). The rule applies even where the person who allegedly has been defamed is a private citizen and the alleged defamer is not a member of the media. Hawkins v Mercy Health Servs, Inc, 230 Mich App 315, 333; 583 NW2d 725 (1998). Thus, in order for respondent's statements to have been considered defamatory they must have been determined to be false, and the trial court, determining that such an inquiry was unnecessary, refused to accept evidence on the issue or to even make the determination. Consequently, we have not been provided with a record that would allow for us to make a determination whether respondent's statements were defamatory.² See id.

In sum, the trial court entered the PPO pursuant to MCL 600.2950a, finding a violation of MCL 750.411s. The trial court determined that respondent had violated MCL 750.411s by posting certain messages on Facebook. Pursuant to MCL 750.411s(6), however, the statute "does not prohibit constitutionally protected speech or activity." Speech over the internet is entitled to First Amendment protection in the same manner as traditional speech. Cooley, 300 Mich App at 256, citing Reno, 521 US at 870. Constitutionally protected speech includes all speech, but for that speech that falls into certain categories, including defamation, fighting words, inciting imminent lawless action, and true threats. Black, 538 US at 359; Beauharnais, 343 US at 266. Respondent's speech did not amount to fighting words, inciting lawless action, or true threats. Black, 538 US at 359; Beauharnais, 343 US at 266. It was not enough to show that respondent's words amounted to harassment or obnoxiousness. Saxe, 240 F3d at 204. Therefore, the only possible category remaining to the trial court that would not be considered constitutionally protected speech was defamation. Beauharnais, 343 US at 266. The trial court's failure to assess whether respondent's statements were true or false, or to accept evidence on the issue, renders review of that issue impossible. Thus, respondent cannot be said to have defamed petitioner, nor is there anything in the record to support a finding that MCL 750.411s was violated. MCL 750.411s(6). Absent a violation of MCL 750.411s, there were no grounds on which to enter the PPO. MCL 600.2950a. Consequently, the trial court's decision to the contrary was an error of law, and therefore, an abuse of discretion. See Kostadinovski, 321 Mich App at 743.

² Because the trial court failed to make the inquiry into falsity, the PPO must be vacated. Therefore, it would be unnecessary to consider whether, pursuant to Const 1963, art 1, § 19, the trial court is permitted to make such a determination. That constitutional provision provides that "[i]n all prosecutions for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury" Id. This Court and the Michigan Supreme Court previously have indicated that Const 1963, art 1, § 19, could apply in civil cases. See Howe v Detroit Free Press, Inc, 440 Mich 203, 225; 487 NW2d 374 (1992) (holding that the defendant's "constitutional right is implicated" in the civil case for libel); see also Royal Palace Homes v Channel 7 of Detroit, Inc, 197 Mich App 48, 56; 495 NW2d 392 (1992) (citing Const 1963, art 1, § 9, for the "basic principle of libel law that truth is a defense to an action for defamation."). Whether the constitutional provision at issue would apply in a PPO case is a determination for another day.

Because we conclude "that the trial court should never have issued the PPO, respondent [is] entitled to have LEIN^[3] reflect that fact." TM, 501 Mich at 319.

III. PRIOR RESTRAINT ON SPEECH

Respondent also argues that the trial court abused its discretion by issuing the PPO that was an unconstitutional prior restraint on his speech. We agree.

A. STANDARD OF REVIEW & APPLICABLE LAW

Constitutional issues, as questions of law, are reviewed de novo. Winkler, 500 Mich at 333. "We review for an abuse of discretion a trial court's determination whether to issue a PPO because it is an injunctive order." Hayford, 279 Mich App at 325. "The term 'prior restraint' is used to describe administrative and judicial orders forbidding certain communications when issued in advance of the time that such communications are to occur. Temporary restraining orders and permanent injunctions—i.e., court orders that actually forbid speech activities—are classic examples of prior restraints." Alexander v United States, 509 US 544, 550; 113 S Ct 2766; 125 L Ed 2d 441 (1993) (quotation marks and citation omitted). Such restrictions are distinguishable from punishment arising from past speech that has been adjudicated as criminal. Id. at 550-551. Because injunctions "carry greater risks of censorship and discriminatory application than do general ordinances," they "require a somewhat more stringent application of general First Amendment principles." Madsen v Women's Health Center, Inc, 512 US 753, 764-765; 114 S Ct 2516; 129 L Ed 2d 593 (1994). Any prior restraint of expression bears "a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity." Bantam Books, Inc v Sullivan, 372 US 58, 70; 83 S Ct 631; 9 L Ed 2d 584 (1963).

B. ANALYSIS

The PPO in this case was an unconstitutional prior restraint on respondent's freedom of speech. Whether and under what circumstances a court in Michigan is permitted to enjoin defamation has not been considered by this Court in a published decision since 1966, in McFadden v Detroit Bar Ass'n, 4 Mich App 554; 145 NW2d 285 (1966).⁴ In that case, a panel of this Court held that "it is a familiar and well settled rule of American jurisprudence that equity will not enjoin a defamation, absent a showing of economic injury” Id. at 558. The McFadden Court provided that the primary reason for refusing to do so was “an abhorrence of previous restraints on freedom of speech,” but acknowledged other reasons, including that there is “an adequate remedy at law, i.e., an action for damages, and that the defendant in a defamation action has the right to a jury trial which would be precluded by granting of an injunction.” Id.

³ LEIN stands for the law enforcement information network.

⁴ This case is not binding because it was decided before November 1, 1990. MCR 7.215(J)(1).

Contrary to McFadden, there is a modern trend toward allowing injunctions of defamatory speech. That modern trend, though, first requires a determination by a factfinder that the statements were definitively false, and then specifically limits any injunction to the adjudicated speech.⁵ As discussed, supra, the trial court failed to make such a determination in this case. Therefore, regardless of whether the modern trend or the rule announced in McFadden, 4 Mich App at 558, is adopted, the issuance of the PPO here, because of the trial court’s failure to determine that the speech actually was false, fails to overcome the “heavy presumption against its constitutional validity.” Bantam Books, 372 US at 70.

In sum, because the trial court never determined what statements by respondent, if any, actually were false, there simply were no constitutionally permissible grounds, even considering the modern trend, on which to issue the PPO. See Bantam Books, 372 US at 70.

IV. CONCLUSION

We reverse and remand with instruction that the “PPO should be updated in LEIN as rescinded.” TM, 501 Mich at 320. We do not retain jurisdiction.

⁵ Numerous courts, both federal and state, have held that a trial court may enjoin a defendant from making defamatory speech, after there has been a determination that the speech was, in fact, false. See Hill v Petrotech Resources Corp, 325 SW3d 302 (Ky, 2010); San Antonio Community Hosp v Southern California Dist Council of Carpenters, 125 F3d 1230, 1239 (CA 9, 1997); Lothschuetz v Carpenter, 898 F2d 1200, 1208-1209 (CA 6, 1990) (WELLFORD, J., concurring and dissenting; HULL, J., concurring and dissenting); Balboa Island Village Inn v Lemen, 40 Cal 4th 1141, 1155-1156; 156 P2d 339 (2007); Retail Credit Co v Russell, 234 Ga 765, 777-779; 218 SE2d 54 (1975); Advanced Training Sys, Inc v Caswell Equip Co, Inc, 352 NW2d 1, 11 (Minn, 1984); Sid Dillon Chevrolet-Oldsmobile-Pontiac, Inc v Sullivan, 251 Neb 722, 732; 559 NW2d 740 (1997); Organovo Holdings, Inc v Dimitrov, 162 A3d 102 (Del Ch, 2017); cf. Kinney v Barnes, 443 SW3d 87 (Tex, 2014).
